

Home Winterization Tips

Homeowners should always think ahead about making seasonal updates to their homes, particularly winterization. Not only do these types of home improvements enhance living environments in colder months and possibly lower energy costs, but most can provide an above average return on investment in resale value. Homeowners should contact an appraiser on the front end of their winterization projects, as they can make recommendations about which updates will potentially provide the most impact on resale value, as well as what is the norm for the local area.

What main updates should homeowners focus on for the winter?

According to Remodeling magazine's Cost vs. Value Report, the projects with the highest expected return on investment are garage door replacements, manufactured stone veneer installation and entry door replacements.

Other winterization steps that homeowners might consider are protection for lawns, decks and roofs, which can potentially add to property values.

What updates can homeowners make now to see an immediate saving in their energy bills?

According to the Energy Saver Guide, produced by U.S. Department of Energy, weatherizing a home can save money and energy. For example, by sealing uncontrolled air leaks consumers can save 10-20 percent on heating and cooling bills which comprise approximately 35-40 percent of a property's annual energy use. The Energy Saver Guide also says homeowners should:

- Use smart and programmable thermostats, which can help lower energy bills by as much as 10 percent per year.
- Replace the home's heating system if it's more than 15 years old.
- Use heat pumps instead of electric furnaces or electric baseboard heaters to reduce electricity used for heating by up to 50 percent.
- Determine their eligibility for weatherization and home energy assistance.

Where can homeowners find more information about winterization and other home improvements?

For additional information on home improvements that can be made throughout the year, see the Appraisal Institute's Home Improvement Tips fact sheet. In addition, the Cost vs. Value Report, published by Remodeling magazine gives a general dollar estimate and the percentage of return a homeowner can expect to receive from an improvement project in a resale situation.

How can a homeowner locate a professional appraiser in their area?

Finding a professional appraiser is just a few clicks away. Simply go to www.appraisalinstitute.org/findappraiser, where consumers can search for appraisers in their area.